Culture vs. Strategy: Which Matters More?

Famous management guru Peter Drucker said that “culture eats strategy for breakfast.” A good business strategy is vitally important to ensure success. In the absence of a positive culture, however, a company likely will struggle to be successful. Drucker was talking about the shared beliefs, attitudes, behaviors, values, and typical practices of members of a business enterprise. Every organization has a culture, whether positive or not; so, Drucker’s point was that a company’s leaders must intentionally focus on creating a positive culture, rather than just allowing it to evolve spontaneously.

Like businesses, not-for-profits also have cultures. In the organizations that we work with or for, we observe – and experience – their cultures. Some cultures are stronger than others, but they most definitely exist. Just like in the business environment, we create and implement strategies to achieve the desired outcomes – in our case, generating increased philanthropic support for the institutions we serve. Those strategies are crucial; they can be bolstered, however, if we honor and capitalize on the very best aspects of the institutions’ cultures.

While I am going to describe my experience when I joined Auburn University as its vice president for development, this situation is applicable to any nonprofit organization.

At Auburn, I learned very quickly how very strong the institution's culture is. There is an authentic sense of family, loyalty, passion, practicality, and commitment to hard work. Indeed, some of those characteristics are outlined in The Auburn Creed, penned in 1943 by then-Auburn professor and football coach George Petrie: “I believe that this is a practical world and that I can count only on what I earn. Therefore, I believe in work, hard work. . . And because Auburn men and women believe in these things, I believe in Auburn and love it.”

Among the most interesting practices – or rituals – at Auburn is rolling the trees at Toomer’s Corner in downtown Auburn following a win by one of its athletic teams. The vision of hundreds, sometimes thousands, of people throwing toilet paper into trees is probably puzzling to many, as it was to me early on. I quickly learned that “rolling Toomer’s” was a shared experience that brought together members of the Auburn Family, from toddlers to grandparents, from locals to people who traveled hundreds of miles to attend the athletic competition.

When we were planning the public launch event for Auburn’s first billion-dollar campaign, our primary goal was to effectively demonstrate the University's impact and importance; to excite people about what we collectively wanted to achieve, both for Auburn and, by extension for society; and to inspire their generous participation in the campaign. Naturally, we had Auburn alumni and donors talk about the tremendous impact Auburn had on their lives; we showcased some of our superb students who talked about the outstanding educational and life-changing experiences they were enjoying; and we had some exciting surprises, both in the form of gift announcements and "celebrity" appearances.

To wrap up the event, and to ensure we sent our guests away with the strongest possible sense of belonging, enthusiasm, and commitment, we had life-sized replicas of the Auburn Oaks appear as a backdrop. As the Auburn Singers, our fantastic student choral group, concluded their singing of "Stars Fell on Alabama," pressure cannons shot rolls of toilet paper across the venue into the trees. There were numerous wow moments during the event, and this one literally took people's breath away. People still talk about the campaign kickoff event seven years later. The campaign was highly successful, and the Auburn Family continues to generously support the university.

This is but one example of how to effectively incorporate an institution's culture and traditions into an overarching strategy to engage people and inspire them to invest their philanthropy in your cause. Culture plays a key role in how and to what degree people feel an authentic connection to an organization. Determining how to effectively marry culture with strategy should be a constant in our work.

When 2 Wordles Collide A Nonprofit Wins

Six years ago, Steven Cravotta was an 18-year-old who developed an app, a game called Wordle!, uploaded it and waited. He originally thought the project was a bust; its average daily download rate was in the single digits. Then last December he checked the app's stats and noticed it had 500,000 downloads in a span of five days. He realized a slew of people looking for the viral, web-only game "Wordle," created by Josh Wardle, were mistakenly downloading his app instead.

giving to environmental organizations growing the most, at 19.3%. PND, 2018

DAF Data for 2021

Fidelity Charitable donor-advised funds awarded $10.3 billion in grants in 2021, a 41% increase over pre-pandemic giving in 2019 — 2.2 million grants were awarded to 187,000 charities, with 2021 grant dollars increasing 13% year-over-year. The report also revealed that COVID-19 effects influenced grant activity, including continued support for direct medical and economic aid. PND, 2-15

The National Philanthropic Trust awarded more than $5.15 billion through donor-advised funds — a 15% year-over-year increase and an increase of 212% compared with pre-pandemic giving in 2019. In 2021, the trust awarded a total of 95,717 grants, with all eight charitable subsectors seeing an increase in grant volume. PND, 3-1

Cravotta's Wordle! has since become the No. 1 game in the App Store in eight countries (8 million downloads and counting), and the now 24-year-old is cashing in on that success for a good cause. With Wardle's blessing, Cravotta will donate $50,000 to Boost! West Oakland. Boost! provides free tutoring and mentorship for children in Oakland, CA — the city where Wardle, used to be based. As both games centered on word puzzles, Cravotta felt the money should go to a literacy-focused nonprofit. Wardle agreed.
