4 Keys to Driving Bigger Gifts

I am always interested in seeing the results of the US Trust Study of High Net Worth Philanthropy and, more specifically, the reasons those being surveyed cite for making a gift.

The top four reasons:

1. Belief in the mission of the organization.
2. Belief my gift can make a difference.
3. Personal satisfaction.
4. Giving to the same organization each year.

All of these reasons point to the a few key points.

First, your organization must have as its focus an area that resonates with the donor. That is, to a very large degree, outside of your control, but do donors and potential donors fully understand your mission? Reinforcing that mission, why it's important and how it's different from other like organizations is critical to gaining and retaining donors' dollars. Stay top of mind through communication efforts that highlight your mission.

It is incumbent to determine, define and detail how a gift makes a difference-what is the impact? When we make a case for a funding opportunity, we must always articulate - specifically - how that gift makes a difference.

You Can Help Donors Deal With Wall Street's Wild Ride

Stock market volatility is relatively commonplace, but after the great recession, everyone is on edge. When philanthropic donors feel the heat of a shifting market, fundraisers must intervene. President and CEO, David King, shares how fundraisers can help quell the fears of donors in a new article for The Chronicle of Philanthropy.
